

type! (scope) : JIRA-000 description

[optional body] BREAKING CHANGE: *****

[optional footer(s)] Reviewed-by: X Refs: 123 🐙 type chore trivial code changes: whitespaces, linter, code formatting, removing unused code feat introduces new, backward-compatible abilities or functionality fix patches a bug in the code of the non-production environment 🐙 → develop hotfix backward-compatible bug fix for the production environment 🐙 → master perf any performance improvements, including the code splitting test adding new or refactoring existing .spec files: unit, snapshot or integration tests refactor changes such as: simplifying or removing redundant code, renaming variables style any styling changes to .css or .scss file or <style lang="scss"> docs new documentation for the developers, both: inline JSDoc and markdown files .md ci changes related to the continuous integration and deployment: scripts, config and tools

!

Optional character added after type or scope.
Intended to draw attention to the commit.

scope

Indicates the place or context of the changes.
Usually a parent folder of the component, application domain or module.

When the scope applies to the entire app, we use all for a scope.

